Dear Parent/Carer,

Making positive connections and getting on with people is so essential to our happiness. Today we have included The Drama Triangle to help us all reflect on our own and our children's behaviour and how we can empower ourselves.

The first step in improving how we feel about a situation is to stop and reflect on our role in it. Then take responsibility for our actions that led to where we are and how this is making us feel. So many of us get caught up in a "drama" and can not see our own place in it and that we can control how we respond and resolve most issues.

Best wishes,

Selina Frazer & Michael Kaitell,
Co-Headteachers

Pupil Voice

Our School Council meet regularly with Miss Ryan. They discuss and act upon a variety of questions, statements and current issues.

Last week's foci included: a review of the curriculum, and who are their five trusted adults.

Some of the comments made can be seen below:

"PSHE allows us to talk about our feelings...Art is fun as we get to design things...RE allows us to find out about different religions from around the world...Learning about the Mayans in history is interesting..."

The children also added what they would like to see more of in our curriculum. Offsite visits to museums were a favourite response.

The children were very confident when responding to who their chosen adults are, by naming a variety of school staff including:

Mr Bellevue, Mrs Bright, class teachers, teaching assistants, Thrive Room teachers and the two headteachers.

The Drama Triangle

- The Victim The victim in Karpman's triangle is not an actual victim, but rather someone feeling or acting like a victim. Karpman, who had interests in acting and was a member of the screen actors guild, choose the term "drama triangle" rather the term "conflict triangle" because his victim is acting. Nonetheless, the victim sincerely feels victimized, oppressed, helpless, hopeless, powerless, ashamed, and seems unable to make decisions, solve problems, take pleasure in life, or achieve insight. The victim's stance is "Poor me!"

- The Persecutor The persecutor is controlling, blaming, critical, oppressive, angry, authoritative, rigid, and superior - self righteous. The persecutor insists, "It's all your fault."
- The Rescuer The rescuer is a classic enabler. The rescuer feels guilty if he/she doesn't rescue. Yet his/her rescuing has negative effects: it keeps the victim dependent and gives the victim permission to fail. It also keeps the rescuer stuck in focusing energy on someone else's problems, not solving his/her own. The rescuer's line is "Let me help you."

Karpman's triangle is a simple tool for conceptualizing the dynamics of dysfunctional roles in conflict and for mapping the role changes as the conflict grows.
